

Daily Report of Wendsday by Group 3: Antti, David, Ilze, Israa, Susanne

The tired trip

We left the hotel a little after 9 a.m. after our bus driver Babis finally found his way there. The weather was rather cool and the sky was covered with clouds. We had great expectations in the day, as Maria told we could finally see some English books there. Eventually we also found out that our bus driver wasn't actually from the Babis clan since he provided us with ice cool water. Maria expressed her special thanks to Edgars for his efforts the night before.

"GO! GO! GO!"

Public

We were surprised that there were no books visible at first sight. Everyone wanted to know why the books weren't there and we had an active discussion with the commercial director of the store.

"GO! GO! GO!"

Eleftheroudakis

The large, 8-floor bookstore has very long traditions dating back to 1860 and it's still owned by the founding father's two granddaughters. What makes Eleftheroudakis special is that 70 % of their titles are in English. Unfortunately we couldn't find out the total amount of titles they have.

"GO! GO! GO!"

Papasotiriou

The atmosphere at the store was heart-warming and we were welcomed with sandwiches and drinks. The bookstore is specialized in software and software-related literature. Papasotiriou offers their customers an astounding number of 300,000 titles.

"GO! GO! GO!"

ION

Our group loved the bookstore. Everything was nice and Maria presented her company in her very own way.

The rest is history...

After departing from Athens Mr. Un-Babis drove us to a pipiteria near sea in a local village. After the lunch we returned to the hotel to do group works and wrote our report. The core project of the week still remains a secret for our group.

Then after the group works we enjoyed a fantastic plethora of images and stories from Yobos' companies. Hoppa! And yes, at the end of the day we were more than delighted to insert food in our gurgles.
